Creator	Commercial Travellers' Association
Creator's Activity/Occupation	Professional organisations
Biography: Formed in 1880, the Victorian Commercial Travellers' Association was established to improve the conditions of employment and residence of commercial travellers. Exerting a considerable influence within non-metropolitan economies, commercial travellers represented one of the most mobile elements of the colonial workforce. A national body, the United Commercial Travellers' Association of Australia, was formed in 1895.

Scope and Content of Series

This collection comprises the administrative records and publications of the Commercial Travellers Association of Victoria, (CTA). Records and publications of the United Commercial Travellers Association of Australia, (UCTAA), whose administration was based in the same offices in Melbourne, are also found throughout the collection.

Administrative records include extensive financial records relating to the various funds created for the members' benefit (such as the Mortuary Benefit Fund) and other aspects of the CTA's operations (such as the Club's operations and general administration). There are long series of minutes and board related records, some membership records, correspondence and subject files. The subject files are of varied quality with some short, well ordered sequences with others being originally highly disordered. These administrative records provide a good overview of the CTA's operations however there is a tendency for the records to be patchy in their overall coverage, with few series being complete in the time periods they cover. There is also a small collection of photographs primarily documenting office holders with a small number of other CTA activities and buildings; many of these photos relate to the period just before and after Australian Federation.

There are valuable and complete series of publications, notably what became The Australian Traveller and its annual supplement, Australia Today (sometimes To-Day). These magazines publicised Australia and its commercial activities and frequently utilised notable artists, authors and photographers in their production. Supporting these publications are considerable holdings of related materials notably printers' proofs, photographs used or rejected and even printers blocks. Over 1000 of these photographs have been digitised are available online <https://archives.unimelb.edu.au/> (search by number 1979.0162 or a place name in digitised collections)

Some records are identifiable as originating with The UCTAA, notably some correspondence. Material from the UCTAA has been identified wherever possible. This collection required reconstruction during processing and some of the subject files in particular were originally highly disordered. Some series are not co-located within the same Units in the collection though they have been named in the same manner to facilitate location.

Here is its monument to the men who fought and died in the war and here, periodically, the citizens pay homage. The General Post Office is the main feature of the short street, and all the buildings are of sound construction, especially the State Savings Bank ( right foreground), in which a great quantity of marble has been used and which is one of Australia's outstanding architectural features. No visitor to Australia should miss seeing the interior of this bank. Sydney is the largest city in the Commonwealth, with a population of more than 1, 000,000, and for beauty and attraction its harbour and surf beaches are unsurpassed.
