HISTORICAL NOTE	The Australian Branch of the British Psychological Society (BPS) was formed in 1944, growing directly out of wartime practice of psychology. In 1963 members voted to become the independent Australian Psychological Society (APS). The Branch was terminated from 31 December 1965, and the Australian Psychological Society commenced on 6 January 1966. Both organisations have functioned through a central body as well as through state groups or branches; in addition the more recent organisation set up a series of divisions and special interest groups. Major activities have been the publication of journals, the holding of annual conferences and the monitoring of the status and standards of the profession. More notes on administrative history are included throughout this list. A history of the Australian Psychological Society was published in 2000: A Meeting of Minds: The Australian Psychological Society and Australian Psychologists 1944-1994. Simon Cooke. Melbourne: APS, 2000. References to this history are included in the list, abbreviated to MoM
DATE OF TRANSFER	1984-1998
ACCESS CONDITIONS	Restricted
DESCRIPTION	Records of the British Psychological Society, Australian Branch and Australian Psychological Society, including National Office, State Groups and Branches, Divisions; oral history recordings and transcript; publications, including newsletters; personal papers of APS members; photographs. See Series Table of Contents for summary
NOTE ON COLLECTIONS	The collection consists of 96 accessions, which were transferred to UMA from the APS National Office, State Groups and Branches and by individual members. Provenance information has been included where it can be determined.

NOTE ON LISTING	This list incorporates and supersedes all previous lists and is a list to all 96 accessions. The collection has been treated as a multi provenance collection and listed together. Accessions comprising a single item or several items only are in some cases listed as items within series. Where items did not form part of a record keeping series, or it could not be reconstructed, artificial series have been created, e.g. Series 71 Oral History Project Recordings. Series and item numbers have been imposed throughout. Note that accession numbers have been retained within the list, at the end of the item decription, in round brackets e.g. (86/38). See Appendix 1 for summary list of accessions, and current box locations. Footnotes in the APS history A Meeting of Minds cite accession numbers and/or box numbers. As the collection has been reboxed, these box references are no longer current. Footnote references in A Meeting of Minds can be sourced by searching accession number and/or item title in this list. (Additional documents cross referencing old and new box locations can also be obtained from UMA if required).

British Psychological Association (BPS) Australian Branch

The Australian Branch of the British Psychological Society (BPS) was formed in 1944, following application to the BPS and a vote of members to form the Branch. It was intended to operate as an autonomous body and promoted itself as the representative body for Australian psychologists, membership growing rapidly. The Annual Branch Conference and the Australian Journal of Psychology (AJP), published from 1949, were the initial mechanisms used to foster this professional community. The Executive was located in Sydney, but the position of Chairman was elected annually, rotating around the States. The States had direct representation on the Executive and Branch meetings were held only at annual conferences. State-based Groups were also formed to assist in countering the problems of distance. These Groups soon became the foundation of the Branch, linking local psychologists with the larger world of the Branch. The continued growth of psychology in Australia during the 1950s and 1960s, and the resultant difficulties of bringing learned and professional activities together, led to ongoing debate on the directions of the Branch, and its relationship with the parent body, BPS. In 1963 members voted to become the independent Australian Psychological Society (APS). The Branch was terminated from 31 December 1965, and the Australian Psychological Society commenced on 6 January 1966. (MoM passim to p. 122).

These files consist mainly of the administrative filing system of the BPS, Australian Branch Office, which was transferred to UMA in various increments from the 1980s. The last major transfer of BPS records was included in accession no. 94/39, the record keeping system of the APS Secretariat, before the office moved from Clunies Ross House to Grattan/Rathdowne Streets, Carlton. As many of these files continued the BPS files transferred in earlier accessions, they have been listed with the BPS series below. Donations by individuals are included here if they complete runs of official series, such as minutes.

Australian Psychological Society

In 1963 the British Psychological Society, Australian Branch members voted to become the independent Australian Psychological Society (APS). A new Constitution was developed by the Constitution Committee over the next two years. It was agreed that the centralised BPS structure would be retained, but that the State Branches required greater autonomy. The number of State Branches was reduced, to one Branch per State, each of which would be represented on Council, and the New England and Hunter Valley Groups lost their place on the Council. The "members at large" gained representation on Council with one councillor for every 200 members. Together with one representative of each division and the chairs of the Publications, Membership and Ethics Committees, these positions would make up the central government of the new APS. (MoM p. 120).

The BPS, Australian Branch was terminated from 31 December 1965, and the Australian Psychological Society commenced on 6 January 1966.

While some functions continued on from the Branch, all series created by the APS have been listed separately here under the new organisation.

By the end of May 1966 most Branch members had joined the APS, some retaining their membership of the BPS. (MoM p. 122). New membership rules relating to accreditation signaled that the APS would move increasingly in the direction of becoming a professional society. To provide for academic interests, the APS published the Australian Journal of Psychology and organised the annual conference, both functions inherited from the BPS, Australian Branch. The Margaret Austin Memorial Lecture (1971-1975) was added to these functions. (MoM p. 135).

The formation of Divisions, the largest of which was the Division of Clinical Psychologists (DCP), reflected the growth of specialist areas in psychological practice (MoM p. 143). These Divisions and Boards became one of the main ways for members to become involved with the Society.

An independent secretariat was established in 1967 and the number of staff employed by the APS increased - from 3 in 1967 to 8 in 1985. In November 1968 the APS moved from the University of Sydney to Clunies Ross House in Melbourne. More steps towards professionalism were the appointment of the first full-time Executive Director in 1978, and the publication from 1979 of the Bulletin of the Australian Psychological Society. (MoM chap. 8)

Some 'social issues' found permanent institutional expression in the APS through the establishment of Committees, Workings Groups, and, from 1984, Interest Groups, including the Interest Group on Women and Psychology. (MoM p.170). The Directorate of Social Issues was established in 1994 as part of a restructure of the APS. (MoM p.178) A Strategic Review begun in 1991 developed a Mission Statement and recommended simplification of the organisation of the APS. The Council was replaced by a Board of Directors, made up of the President of the Society, Executive Director, Treasurer, and Directors of Communications, Membership Affairs, Professional Affairs, Regional Affairs, Scientific Affairs, Social Issues, and Training and Standards, thus dividing Governance of the Society primarily along professional lines. The old boards became colleges in the new structure, and the role of the States was greatly reduced. The changes were approved at the 1993 AGM. The APS moved to new premises at 1 Grattan Street Carlton, signifying a new professionalism in the Society's administration, and the new Directors took office on 30 September 1994. (MoM chap. 12)

This series is based on the Committees as listed in the Cecily Close list, but rearranged here alphabetically by name. Where Committee files were transferred by a Branch or individual they have generally been retained within the provenance of the Branch or individual. See also Series 98 National Office for further Committee files
	16	Archives Committee Series Note: The Archives Committee was established in 1984, initially to address the issue of records in storage at Secretariat Office, National Science Centre Office. APS Archives Liaison Officers, including Alison Turtle and Anona Armstrong, progressed this work on behalf of the Committee. The records of the Committee are essentially contained in Turtle and Armstrong's working files. This series includes lists - transfer, draft and box lists - produced by APS members, and UMA staff to sections of the APS Archive. Note that all these lists are superseded, and are retained as evidence of original finding aids and processing of the collection, not as current finding aids	1983-1994

	58	Northern Territory Branch (89/104) Series Note: The NT Branch was inaugurated on 16 July 1982, with 19 members, 7 Associate Members and 4 affiliates (6 members lived in places remote from Darwin). The formation of the branch followed promptly after the formation of the NT group, the inaugural meeting of which was held on 21 October, 1981. The first project of the NT psychologists was to deal with matters relating to the registration of psychologists in the Territory and the proposed Para-Medical Bill which was about to be tabled in the N.T. Parliament. (Minutes of inaugural meeting of group, 21 October 1981). NT Branch files are arranged chronologically, retaining the original order in arch files as transferred by the Branch. Three files contain agendas and minutes of Committee and General Branch meetings, inward and outward correspondence, from and to the Branch Secretary and Chair, and papers received by the NT Branch. Three files contain copies of APS Council and Executive Committee of Council papers. These have been retained in this series as they formed part of the NT Branch record keeping system	1981-1987

	98	National Office/Secretariat (94/39) Series Note Consists of the second transfer of the record keeping system of the APS National Office, previously known as the National Secretariat. The files were transferred to UMA as accession number 94/39 before the National Office moved from Clunies Ross House to Grattan/Rathdowne Streets, Carlton, in 1994. Many of these files are administration and correspondence files which appear to continue files contained in an earlier transfer of Secretariat files, and rearranged by UMA into various series in the Cecily Close list. However, as the bulk of files in this second transfer of National Office records form part of an alphabetically arranged record keeping system, the original order has been retained as far as possible. Cross references to this series are included in Series Notes throughout. Where it was apparent that files were not part of the National Office record keeping system, in particular "old" files from the BPS, they have been relocated into	c.1956-1991
