HISTORICAL NOTE	The teaching of architecture in the University had been recommended by C.H. Pearson as Royal Commissioner to enquire into education in 1877, and again by Theodore Fink's Royal Commission of 1902. The School of Architecture dates from the appointment of Anketell Henderson as Lecturer in 1911. An Atelier for advanced students was established in 1919, a Board of Studies in 1923 and a degree course in 1927. Until 1931 the School was administered under the Faculty of Engineering, the principal board members being J. S. Gawler (also University Architect) and Prof. Payne (Engineering). A Faculty of Architecture was established in 1931 chaired by a succession of Deans from other faculties until a Chair was created in 1947, and Prof. Brian Lewis appointed to this role. In May 1968 the new School of Architecture and Building was officially opened, from which time the Faculty became officially that of Architecture and Building. In 1975 the Department of Town and Regional Planning was absorbed, and it was known as the Faculty of Architecture, Building and Town and Regional Planning until 1979, when it reverted to Faculty of Architecture. It was renamed again in 1981 as the Faculty of Architecture and Planning. In 2006, Derham Groves taught Course 702-302 Architectural Design 3A, 'The A.W. Purnell Building Museum'. As part of their assessment, students were asked to construct models of buildings from original plans by the architect, A. W. Purnell, which were later exhibited in 2006.
