Gray SE  Womanhood in its Eternal Aspect 1879

4  Spirituality—by which I mean the purity of a strong and noble nature, with all the new and untold powers which must grow out of it—has not yet appeared on our horizon; and its absence is a natural consequence of a diversity of interests between man and woman, who are in the main part even now brought together through the channel of passion; and who, but for that, would be as far asunder as the poles.
