ORTEGA Y GASSER  On love: Aspects of a theme

The more of a man one is, the more he is filled to the brim with rationality. Everything he does and achieves, he does and achieves for a reason, especially for a practical reason. A woman's love that derives from surrender of her ultra-rational being which the impassioned woman makes, is perhaps the only thing which is not achieved by reasoning. The core of the feminine mind, no matter how intelligent this woman may be, is occupied by an irrational power. If the male's the rational being, the woman is the irrational being.
