Mr. White's letter to have been transmitted by a

Due to the condition of the paper, the text is difficult to read. It appears to be a personal letter discussing various topics, possibly including family matters and correspondence, but the handwriting is very challenging to interpret clearly. The letter seems to be dated January 18, 1824, and it's addressed to a person named Mr. White. It contains references to other letters and personal matters, indicating a close relationship between the writer and the recipient.
What does your mind desire? Like me I shall ever feel grateful - and the Aborigines should never cease from being ever so much the means of augmenting the respect that I am sure that my children should have something of what we have to say thereon. We have always been here and if we are ever again we must be happy.

I understand that Mr. Haywood has gone to Mr. Johnson's and that he has gone to his own place. We have heard from Mr. Haywood that he has gone to his own place.

In future we shall not mention anything of the kind. We have heard from Mr. Haywood that he has gone to his own place.
