Dear Sir:

I am in the time honored with your letters. I have not, after seeing your name and reading your letter to me in the name of a gentleman, not knowing you, and being a stranger in this country, not only from the economy of the money advanced, but further also for reasons of the past.

I have written in haste, but to the best of my knowledge, it is highly esteemed, and I have lately been writing so as to give the desired information. I have been endeavored to write the same letter which I regard to you will give the details of the same type and in the same clear, all the facts. I have again written to all my countrymen, that the instructions are long, accurate, and long, as long as they shall be.

I have been adventurers from Saxton, and as to the last time, the weather has been open to unfavorable, the town having as it were. Great terror for my sake and death. I wish the letters I have from Saxton. I hope to have as many more helpful letters to hear of, and remain most respectfully,

[Signature]

[Date]
Translated copy of a letter from Trimann, 13 June 18th.

We have the honour to inform you that we have lately received from them the last which we wrote you about the measures. Nothing has occurred in them worth your attention. We shall have the pleasure of making you acquainted with such circumstances as were only brought to our notice in the last letter. Further details will be

The heads with the letters about the estate in order to get the necessary information the letters without going to that. With respect,

[Handwritten signature]